The film stars Jill Larson, Ann Ramsay and Michelle Ang. The crew makes a film about Alzheimer's patients who reveal something sinister while documenting a woman who has the disease. The film was produced by Jeff Rice and Bryan Singer, which was released on October 21, 2014. Plot Mia, Gavin, and Louis are a team of students who want to create a documentary about Deborah, an elderly woman who has Alzheimer's disease. Deborah is reluctant to be taken down but agrees to the project after her daughter Sarah reminds her that they need the money to keep the house from being withdrawn. During filming, Sarah and Deborah talk about previous years when Deborah worked as a switch operator for her own business response service to make ends meet. As the film crew records her daily routine, Deborah begins to exhibit the increasingly bizarre actions that her personal physician, Dr. Nazir, states are normal for someone with an aggressive form of Alzheimer's disease. However, the operator Luis begins to notice that some of Deborah's actions defy normal explanation and expresses concern that something supernatural is happening. Things are getting more tense after Louis and Gavin record audio of Deborah speaking French, sitting behind her old switchboard, talking about victims and snakes. They also notice that the line for 337 is constantly ringing and discovering that the line belonged to local doctor Henri Desjardins, who disappeared after a series of cannibalistic ritual killings of four young girls. Deborah's behavior becomes so extreme that she is hospitalized for her own safety. Harris, a neighbor and longtime friend of Deborah, is suspicious of the film crew and their motives with her participation. That night, Harris gets drunk and shoots a shotgun at the film crew's van. The police are called and he has been detained. Alarmed by all the events that led to this moment, Gavin leaves the film and leaves. Mia and others discover that Desjardins allegedly tried to create an ancient Monkian ritual that would make him immortal, but demanded the death of five girls who had recently had their first period. They doubt that Deborah is obsessed with Desjardins, as a similar case occurred in Africa, where the mother was obsessed with her dead son and was released only when the sorcerer burned the corpse of his son. At the hospital, Harris visits Deborah, who begs Harris to kill her. He tries to fulfill her wish, but is knocked out on a hospital television ward thrown across the room, most likely by the person possessing Deborah. Sarah, Mia and Luis discover that Deborah unsuccessfully tried to kidnap Cara, a young cancer patient whom she had previously tried to take away. Sarah learns from Harris that many years ago Deborah learned that Desjardins planned to use Sarah as her fifth victim. He says this prompted her to kill the doctor before he could execute his plan and buried the doctor's body in the yard. The group eventually finds the remains of the body and tries to him, but it fails, despite being doused doused Lighters. Deborah manages to kidnap Cara and take her to the place where Desjardins killed all his previous victims. Upon discovering Deborah had gone into the mines, Sheriff Tweed followed, only to be killed a few minutes later. After hearing Tweed's attack, Sarah and Mia set about chasing to find Deborah just as she was trying to swallow Cara's head in a snake-like manner. They finally managed to burn Desjardins' body. The film then cuts news footage from reporters that Deborah was deemed unfit to stand trial for crimes she committed during her abduction of Cara. Additional news shows that Cara has overcome her cancer and is celebrating her 10th birthday. When the reporter begins to finish the story, Cara turns to the camera and gives a sinister smile, hinting that Desjardins' ritual has been completed and that he now controls her body. Starring Jill Larson as Deborah Logan Ann Ramsay as Sarah Logan Michelle Eng as Mia Medina Ryan Catron as Harris Middlel Ann Vedian as Dr. Analyzer Brett Gentile as Gavin Jeremy DeCarlos as Louis Tonya Bludsworth as Linda Tweed Julianne Taylor as Cara Minetti. Campbell as Henny Desjardins as Jeffrey Woodard as Vitaly's father David Haines as reporter Sage Kline as the Hospital Security Production Shooting took place in Charlotte Region, North Carolina and Creative Network Studios. Additional trick takes were used instead of Mia, Deborah and others. Vincent Guastini made special effects. He said he was impressed with the script and wanted to work with filmmakers. He described his relationship with Robitel as a really collaborative effort. He agreed with Robitel's choice to limit the number of footage seen transforming as he felt it added more plausibility and truth. Admission Taking Deborah Logan has an 89% approval rating on Rotten Tomatoes, based on reviews from 9 critics, and an average score of 6.1/10. Ain't It Cool News called it found footage taken correctly... one of the most effective recordings in the popular subgenre, while The Wrap called it Netflix Horror Gem, calling the film one of the freshest recordings in American horror possession. Nerdist and Dread Central have both written mostly positive reviews for the film, with Dread Central commenting that while the film won't appeal to everyone, if you're looking for a creepy little movie that's free of pretensions and sometimes logic, and in getting some quick shivers, you really can't go wrong. In contrast, Bloody Disgusting cooked the film, stating that it was unnecessarily derived from other similarly themed works to be truly effective and that apart from a specific scene near the end, the film brings nothing new to the table.
